Often you'll get a book and read a good percentage of it before realizing that there is so much more you have to discover. Zero Peace is such a book. A graceful, honest and heroic confession of the horrors and sadness of the genocide against the non-Jewish people of Europe in WW2, it reads like a novel. The re-thinker for the 21st Century - Film review Joshua Brad Collins Imagine for a moment that you are living in Germany in February 1945. It is like no other time you have ever known. Children are being murdered in their schools, women are being abused on the streets, and there is no food or fuel to keep you warm. Do you have a choice? Should you risk everything to escape to some foreign country that may be difficult to reach or put yourself in the hands of a suspicious, overbearing stranger? Sound like a story line from a bad movie? That's not fiction. This is the story of real people who lived through this nightmare. That's the world that Joshua Brad Collins portrays in his 90 minute documentary, The Rescue of the Jewish Children of Europe. And, how the world will hear these horrific and moving stories from the surviving "children
