You were an ordinary man, a simple engineer in an ordinary life, until one day... You woke up. Naked, tied and chained to a bed. It looks like you've been kidnapped! At the other end of the room, in a wall alcove, there's a black screen on which a crazy man is interviewing you... After a few minutes of "confession" the man stops talking and starts playing with his toys. He's playing a game of strategic dominance between you and him, he's taunting you. It's your first day in a place where you don't know the rules. Where the face of everything you have in your head is about to change. But something tells you to stay alive. And even if you want to leave, you have been trapped here for months. You are the only thing keeping the two systems of the building together. This can happen because of what are called positive (and sometimes negative) global carry factors. I've previously written about negative global carry in Better Than I Ever Expected, Part IV: The Paths to Global Carry.
